Geoff

many thanks - it's certainly a challenging task!

Best wishes,

Andrew

Hi Andrew

My website is in the public domain so I can't stop you from using its content (not that I would want to). I wish you well in developing your project. Not the first time this has been proposed and no doubt not the last.

Hello,

I am one of four University College London students doing a project for our MScs on seeing how well computers can solve cryptic crosswords. We're very impressed by your website, in particular how it explains the solutions. Would you have any objections if we used some explanations from your website as data to help in this project?

If you would like any more information, please let me know.

Many thanks,
Andrew Wren
